SHOWER FOR MRS. GODFREY
APPLETON, Aug. 25.—The ladies of the community arranged and held a miscellaneous shower at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Grinnett in honor of Mrs. L. Godfrey, nee Miss Pearl Grinnett. The many beautiful and useful gifts she received indicated the high esteem in which the ladies of the community have for this former resident of Appleton. Mrs. Godfrey is in a few well chosen words thanked her friends for their kindness. A delicious lunch ended a very pleasant afternoon for all present.

Mr. John McNaught is suffering from a severe attack of tonsillitis. His friends will be glad to hear he is on the road to recovery.

Mr. Geo. Martin, who has been spending his vacation at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McNaught, returned to his home in Edmonton last week.

Miss Kay Little of Beaverlodge was a visitor at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McNaught on Thursday.

Master Walter Nelson of Grande Prairie is a week-end visitor at the home of his friend, Robert Heller.

Miss Ruth Allison is spending a few days visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Dunlop of Grande Prairie.

The school board is having the school thoroughly ready for opening, September 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cleland and son, Bruce, were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Pittsman on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Dixon, who have been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Heller, left by car on Friday for their home in Alta. Alberta.

Mr. and Mrs. Andy Laing were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Miller, Elmworth, on Sunday.

Mrs. Geo. Bair, Miss Dot Bair, and Mrs. P. Couper were business visitors to Grande Prairie on Friday.

Rev. Geo. A. Shielts of Beaverlodge held divine service at the schoolhouse on Sunday. A numerous congregation listened to an excellent sermon.

Mr. Alec Watt returned home last week after an extended visit to Edmonton and other points. Alec now knows the best part of Alberta.

Little Agnes Lawlor of Grande Prairie is spending a week visiting her friend, Margaret O'Brien.

Mr. C. Bagnell is a business visitor to Edmonton at present.

MAJOR STRANGE WRONG

A pleasant afternoon at the Beaverlodge Experimental Sub-Station was marked by the remarks of Major Strange to the effect that when farmers get together, instead of talking of their own affairs they talk about things they don't know anything about. As one young man blurted out beside the scribe remarked, "all we know is to go to the barn and shovel." We venture the opinion that by the time Major Strange lives fifteen years longer in "Canada" he may learn that the average Canadian farmer has intelligence enough to discuss not only his own affairs but also the affairs of the nation as a whole.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by—
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
They foolish—so am I
Then why should I sit in the corner's seat?
Or hold the center's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man. S.W.P.

SEEN AND HEARD

Next hustling on the homestead and setting ready for a cold winter.
Telly Elliott of Paradise Point, on the Wapiti, bringing the scribe and his family home when they were stranded at the blueberry patch with a broken propeller shaft. Thanks, Telly.

Reduction In Grain Storage Rate

In Alberta Pool Elevators

Announcement is made that a storage rate of 1/45 of a cent a bushel per day will apply on grain stored in all Alberta Pool elevators, effective from August 31, 1933 for the ensuing license year. The present rate, which has prevailed for many years, is 1/30 of a cent a bushel a day.

The Alberta Pool elevators are making this voluntary reduction as a temporary measure in reducing cost to grain growers during the present recession in the marketing of grain.

The proposed reduction will affect 435 Pool elevators in this province as well as four terminals operated by the Alberta Pool on the Pacific coast.

Alberta Pool Elevators

Bill Belfrey of Dinwiddie bringing Social Credit voters a pull out of a mudhole.

With the provincial election past history, we can look over the recent campaign, which was a pull out of a mudhole, and remaining so till four years ago, when the Hon. R. S. Curran was of that opinion. I have taken an interest in the political waters of the country. I have seen some warm campaigns. I have never before have I seen a combined effort of political parties of all shades and financial corporations as the one, or discredited Social Credit.

There was column by word and cartoon without scruple. The religious tendency of Mr. Aberhart was paraded before the people as if it should be a bar to one seeking political honors. Intolerant contempt and ridicule were made of the intelligence of men and women who supported Social Credit. Only a few of the supporters of the old parties realize that it was Mr. McEwen's attitude of their party and failure to fulfill promises that brought about the recent great victory for the people of Alberta. If the staff printed in the G. P. Herald is any criterion of liberal propaganda over the province, then that party got what they richly deserve in value.

Social Credit people generally agree with Mr. Basil Blackett. He says money should be a pure means of exchange. Money should be just tickets or coupons, and not a yard measure of value which has been used to make stable or stop from varying from one to one hundred changes in value.

On behalf of the Social Credit voters of this district, the scribe wishes to thank the editor of The Tribune for the courteous treatment towards all political parties during the past campaign.

THE KEYS OF HEAVEN, NEW YORK

A few years ago the U.S.A. was responsible for the introduction of a number of cruises each of which had a non-stop fox trot competition and such absorbing sports as tree-sitting and ice-creaming. One variety, which lasted as long as any, was a non-stop flying record for business and pleasure. The record was set on July 1, 1931, after remaining in the air 63 1/2 hours—27 days 5 1/2 hours.

An hour before they landed, the intrepid aviators sent the following message to the expectant world: "It gives us a kind of out feeling to have to end it all."

So, what contributed considerably to their success in beating the world's record for supertransatlantic suspension of 23 days 1 hour and 40 minutes was the fact that they employed squirrel chewing gum and saving air cushions internally and externally respectively, and cheerfully supported their half-hour throughout the arduous period by means of Swiss, Tiresias sock suspenders.

And the man who drove a motorcar backwards from New York to San Francisco concealed such intelligence. With all due respect to the American Aeroplane, we do not think that a month at quarter throttle would prove anything of aeromautical value, because we should expect even our cheapest automobiles to exceed that without a murmur.

THE N.A. REVIEW
The excellent pictures we see in the newspapers of the Jubilee Review

British Navy was drawn up in formation waiting for the royal yacht to appear, but the lines, and by way of showing off a couple of the Navy's crack destroyers, the lines of a few minutes before the Queen was due, just to demonstrate to the assembled multitude in excursion steamers what the taxpayer was getting for his money.

The destroyers were doing their 22 knots, and the crews of the big ships, dressed on the parade and along the waterfront for the Queen, were regarding them with pride, from between two ships far down the line, slipped a little bit of a boat about the size of a small steam launch, and started after the destroyers in a smother of foam and steam. It travelled nearly twice as fast as the destroyers; it caught them; it passed them; it left them behind, and it swung round the line abreast ahead of them. The Navy got the shock of its life. Stout-hearted seamen, trained on stick and string, nearly fell off their perches on the lip of the yard, or what they call them. Hardened seadogs of admirals and post captains would have died of epilepsy on their high and lofty bridges at the blasphemy committed by a civilian boat intruding into the royal course. If they had not been kept alive by curiosity to know what had wiped up their crack destroyers, Australia's camp and a shiver ran along the warships as the little boat tore past, routing as it ran the whole tradition of the Senior Service.

That little boat was the "Turbinia," designed and built by the Hon. Charles Parsons, since deceased, on Tyne, with a little boat four feet past, routing as it ran the whole tradition of the Senior Service.

For years before that Charles Parsons had been developing the steam turbine. The Admiralty's experts would not look at it. The idea of a steam-driven windmill as a power plant for a ship seemed to them ridiculous. Practically the idea of the Lochman (or Handley Page) slot seemed to the German patent this year recall an incident which happened at Queen Victoria's Jubilee Review at Spithead in 1907. The office in 1910-20. Although, as a son of a peer, Charles Parsons had social pull, even that could not get him past the experts to the Contract Department—as many a sound inventor and designer has found in air affairs in the past 25 years.

So in the end he had to force himself to forget that he was a gentleman by birth and education, and to do the thing that was not done, and abjure himself in the path which was being kept clear for Queen Victoria, that is, doing as he did a general service to his Queen and to her people, than ever Sir Walter Raleigh did when he laid his clock over that other puzzle in front of Queen Elizabeth.

The steam turbine revolutionized sea-transport and sea war alike. Also it made the way easier for the use of oil fuel. And nothing was going forth accustomed to oil fuel was a step towards educating them up to the oil engine and ultimately to the oil transport. So we all owe gratitude indirectly to Charles Parsons, besides what we owe to Horace Short.

STATESMEN MEET BUT WAR PREPARATIONS GO ON

While preparations for war go forward in Ethiopia, statesmen of Great Britain, France and Italy are meeting to try to find a way to peace. Captain Eden for Britain, Premier Laval for France, and Baron Aloisi (upper right) for Italy are the principals in the conference. Lord Robert Cecil (left, below) takes the view that the British government is in honor bound to save Ethiopia from war. In the upper left are shown patriot Ethiopian girls from the school of "released slaves" carrying flags; lower right shows pay day in the Ethiopian army; the soldiers being paid in Maria Theresa dollars, worth 2 1/2 cents, which are minted in Austria.

Business Shows Big Gain Over Last Year - Babson Appeals for International Co-operation

BABSON PARK, Mass., Aug. 16.—All business reports for early August show improvement over July and an encouraging gain over August of last year. Again let me say that I am very optimistic on the outlook for business this fall. For the past two years consumer industries have been the mainstay of trade activity in the consumer group, however, is now being supported by revival in the heavy industries. This is the most important development since business started up in March, 1933.

REPLACING GEOGRAPHIC WITH ECONOMIC BARRIERS

There is, however, still at least one fly in the ointment — namely, the chaotic condition of foreign trade. Further advances in both the consumer and heavy industries could probably boost business above the X-Y normal line on the Babsonchart, but I seriously doubt if we can ever have an era of real prosperity without a revival in world trade. As I look back over the last thirty years I can see an alarming growth of economic isolation throughout the world. Inventors have brought the nations closer together by breaking down geographic obstacles; but politicians have separated them again by erecting economic barriers.

Readers should never forget that in the long run we prosper only as all nations prosper. The biggest mistake you can make is to think that your own personal affairs have no connection with the course of business and trade in foreign markets. Reviving world trade could mean more to the Georgia cotton planter, the Kansas wheat farmer, the Maine potato grower, the Pacific coast lumberman, the Detroit automobile manufacturer, and the New England millowner than all the New Deal experiments put together. No matter how dull the subject of foreign trade may seem to you, do not forget that its backwash is felt in every nook and cranny of the nation.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS APPROACH BALANCE

Foreign trade has been rising slowly since the low of 1932, but monthly dollar value is only running around $100,000,000 against $100,000,000 in 1929. Total trade among all nations has risen only three per cent over the depression low. However, our foreign commerce figures for the past three years show one very encouraging tendency, viz., a closer balance between exports and imports. On the whole, this tendency of our balance of trade to become less "favorable" (rightly or wrongly, balance of trade is considered "favorable" when exports exceed imports) is a good sign. It means that we are giving other nations more business so they in turn can give us more business.

The only possible way in which international commerce can be rebuilt is for the United States to lead the way toward world confidence by stabilizing its currency and lowering its tariffs. If this is not done our export trade is bound to be curtailed by further retaliatory measures on the part of other countries. Only recently Germany and Italy have taken action in order to reduce their imports from the United States until they balance their exports to us. As any thinking person realizes, it is far more logical to boost imports into this country than to have our exports to other countries restricted in order to balance trade. Raising imports improves business abroad while reducing our exports only adds to unemployment at home.

SECRETARY HULL'S DIFFICULT TASK

Under the reciprocal tariff program the administration has taken some constructive steps toward better trade conditions. Progress has been slow, however, the overwhelming job which faces Secretary of State Hull in completing these agreements. Each group which feels it might be slightly injured by changes in the tariff loudly claims that in its particular case the "status quo" must be maintained. On the other hand, the taxpayers, exporters, foreign bondholders, farmers, and the public at large, who would stand to benefit from reviving world commerce, are silent and allow these minority interests to dictate our foreign policy.

Take, for instance, the steel industry, which recently protested against changes in its tariff set-up. It had taken more, rather than less, steel from Germany in 1934 than in 1933, so might well have bought more of our cotton instead of drastically reducing her purchases. Southern cotton growers and exporters, instead of having less business, would have had more. They might have needed additional machinery, which in turn might have increased the demand for steel. This simple illustration shows that our restrictive tariffs are not only handicapping business abroad but at home.

STABILIZATION ESSENTIAL TO TRADE REVIVAL

This study is a concrete reason why I favor low tariffs. Government statisticians examined two groups of 30 typical industries in 1929 — one highly protected and the other without tariff aid. Average wages were found to be 5 per cent higher in the unprotected group than in the former. In addition, consumers were actually injured by the tariff because of the high prices they were forced to pay for products of the protected group.

Furthermore, the currency problem is still as unsettled as ever. Three or four European countries cling desperately to the gold standard even though sooner or later devaluation on their part will probably be a necessity. This gold bloc for the past two years, has been the center of the world's monetary disturbance. Hence, devaluation now might set the stage for international currency stabilization of the near future. The latter, however, without a general lifting of trade barriers, could be but a temporary aid.

Some day, no one can say when, a great war of currencies will be fought against the fettering of world commerce will raise the world. Security comes only through helping the other fellow and raising him to our standard. Remember, nations can prosper again only as the pendulum swings back. They must turn from the present frenzied policy to attain economic independence. They must move toward a freer intercourse among nations of humankind, peace, and service.

Business, as estimated by the Babsonchart, is now 10 per cent below normal, but 6 per cent above a year ago. Copyright, 1935, Publishers Financial Bureau.

FIRST COMMONERS WED IN HISTORIC CHAPEL

Down through the centuries the ancient chapel of Henry VII has witnessed many royal weddings, but never before have commoners been married within its sacred walls.
